Farmlands

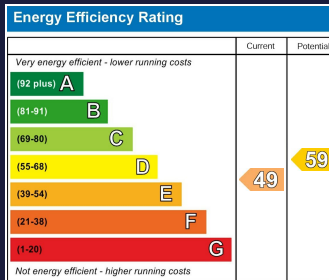

The lands are currently let in conacre and are currently used for the production of silage. The lands are free draining and are thought equally suitable for producing vegetable crops.

Agricultural Lands

The arable lands are currently all laid down to grass which appear to have been re-seeded in recent years and believed to be currently used for the production of silage, but appear to equally suitable for the production of cereal or vegetable crops. The grazing lands appear to have been laid down to permanent pasture and thought suitable for grazing purposes.
